1) Oculus Innovative Sciences (Nasdaq/OCLS/Buy/$0.41) – Oculus announced this morning that the Company has been granted an upgraded reclassification of its CE Mark (to a Class III medical device) for the European formulation of Dermacyn Wound Care. The reclassification, approved by regulatory agencies in the UK, will include the expanded claim of reduction of microorganisms and a local antimicrobial effect. Specifically, the new indication is for "use in the debridement, irrigation and moistening of acute and chronic wounds, ulcers, cuts, abrasions and burns. Through reducing the amount of microorganisms and contributing to a moist environment, it enables the body to perform its own healing process." This expanded label indication is expected to boost marketing power of Dermacyn in Europe related to wound care applications. Separately, last week Oculus announced the addition of Jerry McLaughlin to its Board of Directors. McLaughlin is interim CEO of Applied BioCode, an emerging molecular diagnostic company, and President and CEO of DataStream Medical Imaging Systems. His previous healthcare experience includes senior level positions with DataFlow Information Systems, CompuMed, Diagnostic Products Corporation (acquired by Siemens), UniPath (medical division of Unilever) and Boehringer Mannheim Diagnostics. We are maintaining our Buy rating and $2.25 price target on OCLS shares. RMW

2) Atossa Genetics (Nasdaq/ATOS/Buy/$11.35) – Atossa Genetics was written up in Stockpickr.com in an article by Sr. Contributor Roberto Pedone entitled "4 Stocks Rising on Unusual Volume" this morning. The trading-oriented column cited Atossa's unusually high volume (Monday's Volume: 149,000 vs. Average Volume: 64,387, or a 77% increase) and quoted:

"From a technical perspective, ATOS bounced higher here right above some near-term support at $10 with above-average volume. This move is quickly pushing ATOS within range of triggering a major breakout trade. That trade will hit if ATOS manages to take out its all-time high of $12.40 with high volume. Traders should now look for long-biased trades in ATOS as long as it's trending above Monday's low of $11.39 or above some key near-term support at $10 and then once it sustains a move or close above its all-time high at $12.40 with volume that hits near or above 64,387 shares. If that breakout triggers soon, then ATOS will enter new all-time high territory, which is bullish technical price action. Some possible upside targets off that breakout are $15 to $16." We are maintaining our Buy rating and $16 price target on ATOS shares. RMW
